

How working on

Community Health Issues

changes your counselling, hypnotherapy or psychotherapy career forever.

Instead of searching for clients, you can offer free programmes, get well-paid and increase your paying client-base

There's a demand for people like you

Community organisations like clinical commissioning groups, health foundations, local councils, funds and trusts and specialist health and wellbeing bodies, as well as locally-orientated national campaigns and sponsors all subsidise programmes that you could easily run. In particular, there is a huge demand for competent people to supervise courses to prevent Type 2 diabetes, to work with people with size and weight issues and in dementia protection.

But you don't get the work

Yet most therapists and counsellors feel that it is very difficult to get work via the NHS and other funding bodies.

Three new relatively short courses will show you what you need to do to get this work - and, more importantly, will actively work with you to bring regular, reliable extra income into your practice.

Train for a Certificate in Size & Weight Practice

Ideal if you don't have a health or biomedical qualification - there's no need for any to succeed in this fascinating, and richly rewarding, field of work.

There are two ways to earn this certificate:

Either take the "Intensive 7521" - 7 days over 8-9 days or the "Standard 7521" - 5 days over 5-6 weeks.

Whichever you choose, once you have this Certificate, you will be a Registered Size and Weight Practitioner.

This qualification is all you need to work as a facilitator or as a mentor on the E-SaW Club's "Guaranteed Permanent" Programme. You can also work with private clients.

It is also one of two alternative courses you can take to become a Registered Diabetes Prevention Practitioner. The other option is to take course 7522 Diploma in Clinical Size and Weight Practice, if you have the necessary clinical qualifications to do so.

In addition, it is an excellent training for those who would like to work independently within their own clinic, gym, studio or practice and the National Colleges will help you to adopt the programme to successfully suit your needs.

The next "Intensive 7521" - 7 course days over 8 days - starts on 14th July and takes place online and 30 minutes from London by train..

Train for a Diploma in Clinical Size & Weight Practice

This is for people who have a health or biomedical qualification.

People with an approved clinical qualification who successfully complete either the 5 days over 5-6 weeks - or the 7 days over 8-9 days - versions of this Diploma may call themselves Registered Clinical Size and Weight Practitioners.

Please check if your clinical qualification is approved by sending an email to work@e-saw.club

This clinical diploma, for people with a previous clinical qualification (or who are currently in training) is all you need to work with E-SaW's central programme "The Guaranteed Permanent" either in club groups or with E-SaW Private clients at their homes or work. You can work as a consultant, a facilitator, or as a mentor.

It is also an excellent training for those who would like to work independently within their own clinic, gym, studio or practice and the National Colleges will help you to adopt the programme to successfully suit your needs.

Train to be a Registered Diabetes Prevention Practitioner

This course is all that is required to be a Registered Diabetes Prevention Practitioner.

The course requires students to take 2 days (12 hours) teaching and a further 10 hours of home study.

The course costs an additional £550 (lunches on teaching days taken face-to-face are included) and further details will be posted on this page shortly.

The National Colleges Initiative is a group of emotional wellbeing training organisations that became concerned that many skilled counsellors and therapists had spare capacity in their diaries, whilst many members of the public needing support waited long periods to get it. This resulted in the #NoMoreEmptySlots campaign in 2014 and the setting up of this innovative training.
